SUPPORTING YOUR CHILD'S WRITING SKILLS

Have you found that your child is reading very well, but when they have to write something they cannot write more than a phrase? Sometimes it helps for them to talk about what they want to write first. Students can usually talk about what they want to write so much easier than just writing.

Unfortunately, if they are out of practice with writing, their confidence can be very low. Working with your child to get them to write can be quite daunting, but starting with having them use a speech-to-text software, such as Notes on your iPhone, can give you a text to start with. After that have them write down what they said. That way they are just copying what they said. Then, once they have written it down, you can work with them on spelling and sentence structure. This doesn't work with all students, but I have seen it work wonders with some. It doesn't hurt to try!

Here are more suggestions!

A WORD FROM THE OWNER

2023 has truly been a crazy year! There have been wars, heat records set, natural disasters, and economy changes, and all while we are still trying to adjust to changes that we are dealing with as a result of the pandemic. It hasn't all been easy to say the least, but also during this time, we have all discovered how courageous and resilient we are with each passing day. Let's take every day one day at a time and have grace for each other and ourselves!

God Bless!

REINFORCING YOUR CHILD'S EDUCATION AT HOME

by Summer Stanley

Often, parents lack confidence in their own teaching skills, or they feel as if they are “terrible at math” or “never did well in English classes,” so they are intimidated by helping their kids with homework...
